BICICLETTA

POSTCARD N°1

*Caro Damian,
yesterday in Cremona, an old man
was playing cards under the arcade,
and the laughter of his friends
spilled into the square.
A Bicicletta shimmered in my hand,
and someone called "cin cin."*

When I turned, the piazza was all light and the glass was already half-empty.

AMARO SOUR

POSTCARD N°2

*Ciao Olivia,
yesterday in Rome, I slipped into a bar
on Via Giulia just as the rain started.*

*The bartender, poured me an Amaro Sour while everyone
at the counter sang "maledetta primavera".*

*Outside, the bells rang,
and I couldn't tell if it was the drink
or the city that healed me.*

DAIQUIRI
POSTCARD N°3

*Davide, last night,
the air was heavy, hot and alive.*

*Bodies twisting to salsa,
trumpets screaming, drums pounding.
Chaos everywhere!*

*Then, a Daiquiri in my hand.
Cold glass, frozen breath.
Havana slowed for a heartbeat. Sharp.
And the music pulled me back.*

Hasta la proxima, Raul.

MARGARITA

POSTCARD N°4

*Querido Andres,
in Oaxaca I met a woman with a smile
you could lose your head over.
She handed me a Margarita
without saying a word.*

*Not sure if I fell for her or the drink.
When she left, I didn't know whether
to follow her or order another.
I stayed. Maybe that was a mistake.
Un abrazo fuerte, Jose.*

PORNSTAR MARTINI

POSTCARD N°5

*Cher Fiamma,
yesterday there was this bar in Cannes,
hot and thick with noise.
In the middle of it all, a dancer
sipped a Pornstar Martini*

*I pushed through the crowd. She smiled, brought the glass to my lips, and
the gold burst — and in a instant
the whole damn city made sense.
Writing, and already gone.
A kiss, Nicole.*

PETE'S WORD

POSTCARD N°6

*Hey Frankie,
yesterday in the Highlands, the fog
was so thick we nearly missed the turn.
Ended up in a bar with one old guy
and a fire that cracked like it knew secrets.*

*The bartender
slid us a Peated Last Words,
said nothing, just pointed to the window.
Out in the mist, someone was watching.*

POSTCARD N°7

*Dear Yaya,
last afternoon in Soho
I asked for something to wake me up
and shut me down.
What he gave me tasted like
black electricity.*

*Didn't sleep. Didn't care.
London kept me buzzing
till morning.*

GODFATHER

POSTCARD N°8

*Cara Linda,
last night, in a small bar tucked away
in the streets of Little Italy,
a man with his face buried under his hat, slid a drink across the bar.*

*The bartender, still polishing a glass,
whispered it was a Godfather.
I downed it in one shot, stepped outside,
and the streetlights looked at me
like they knew something.

POSTCARD N°9

*Ciao Bea,
yesterday the snow was falling hard,
turning the street into a quiet movie.
The Alaska in my hand
bit sharper than the wind outside.*

*A stranger
lit my cigarette without asking,
smiled like he had been waiting all night.
I left before I could ask for his name.
See you when it melts,
Claire.*

VIEUX CARRÉ

POSTCARD N°10

*Dolce Lia,
tonight at the Carillon the blues
was rolling slow, the trumpet crying
and the bass keeping secrets.
Couples moved like shadows in the low light,
hips swaying, eyes half-closed.*

*I sat at the bar with a Vieux Carre,
each sip catching the rhythm, and before long I wasn't just watching the dance
I was in it.
See you in the next song, Jack.*

LITTLE ITALY
POSTCARD N°11

*Tony,
the street was alive, kids shouting,
steam rising from the grates, men
arguing with their hands in the air.*

*In the bar, the air was thick
with smoke and stories.
Maria lifted her glass, eyes flashing,
and it felt like all of Little Italy
was beating inside that room.*
